"I told you so," opened Obvious to his friend the Pessimist yesterday after he had heard the ninth inning results heralded from the Review windows.
"Heh!" was the response from the Pessimist, who, though there is no certainty about it, must have got out on a baseball limb and sawed it off behind himself.

"Well, you know," added Obvious, "that when you take old heads at the game and put them up against the youngsters that the noodle will, in nearly all cases, win out. I can't see where you have any right to bet on Biboklyn. It is very obvious to me."
"Yes, as clear as San Pedro mud on a rainy night. Just wait!"
